THE CHANT OF MIKINAK

MIKINAK the Turtle had a thin, thin skin,
And it let joy out and it let woe in;
For crops of grief his soul was fertile;
A sensitive chelonian was Mikinak the Turtle.

Up on the shore, or down in the slime, Mikinak the Turtle had a mighty hard time:

Waguc the Fox Kit pushed him with his snout;

Moween the Bear Cub tumbled him about; Wucagi the Heron jabbed him with his bill;

Kag the surly Porcupine pricked him with a quill;

Ahdoock the Red Deer rolled him in the dirt.

Only Mikinak knew how it hurt!

The Chant of Mikinak

Mikinak the Turtle brought his pains and his woes
To Gwickwe the Robin where the hill brook flows.
He wailed and he moaned and he sobbed
and he sighed,
He grieved and he groaned and he wept
and he cried:
"They treat me bad, and I'm sick and sore;
I just won't stand it any more.
I want to run and hide, but I don't know where,
For they pinch me here, and they prod me
there.
I'm as mild as a waif of the woods can be;
Why does everyone pick on me?
What shall I do? Bitter is my cup!"
Chirruped Gwickwe the Robin, "Toughen up! toughen up!"
Mikinak the Turtle went far and beyond;
He bathed in the waters of the Limestone
Pond;

The Chant of Mikinak

Hard grew his chest and his dorsal dome;
Mikinak the Turtle came scrambling home.
Moween and Waguc met him on the run:
"Here comes Mikinak! Let's have fun!"
They bumped him, they thumped him, they used him as a ball;
Mikinak the Turtle didn't mind at all.
They jounced him, they bounced him, they made him loop the loop;
Mikinak the Turtle didn't give a whoop.
When they found that Mikinak didn't care
a bit
Moween and Waguc permanently quit.
Mikinak the Turtle has a hard, hard shell,
And he now gets along in the world pretty well.
"Where the sticks will fly and the stones
will hurtle,
You mustn't be too sensitive," says Mikinak the Turtle.
